

parent riddle. Give up? The answer, of course, is Barry Goldwater for President in 1964.

"I'll pass," said Rep. Hallock.

This is what one Republican privately told President Kennedy during the President's series of conferences with opposition leaders following the Cuban fiasco: "The trouble is, Mr. President, chickens are coming home to roost just as you

Several Republican Congressional leaders are collecting all of President Kennedy's campaign statements to fall on the asserted decline in American prestige under the Eisenhower administration. The idea: If and when a concerted Republican attack is made on Mr. Kennedy over events in Cuba and Laos, party leaders will be able to fire the President's own words back at him.

By the Herald Tribune
Washington Staff

During World War II the Federal Bureau of Investigation, under J. Edgar Hoover, was responsible for intelligence in Latin America. When the Central Intelligence Agency was formed after the war, Mr. Hoover saw this field slip out of his control. He would like very much to recapture it, and his associates are spreading the word in Washington that the Central Intelligence Agency would have been a good deal better off if the F. B. I. had been given the job instead of the State Department. C. I. A.